

Along the Opatovice Canal through Pardubicko

Route description

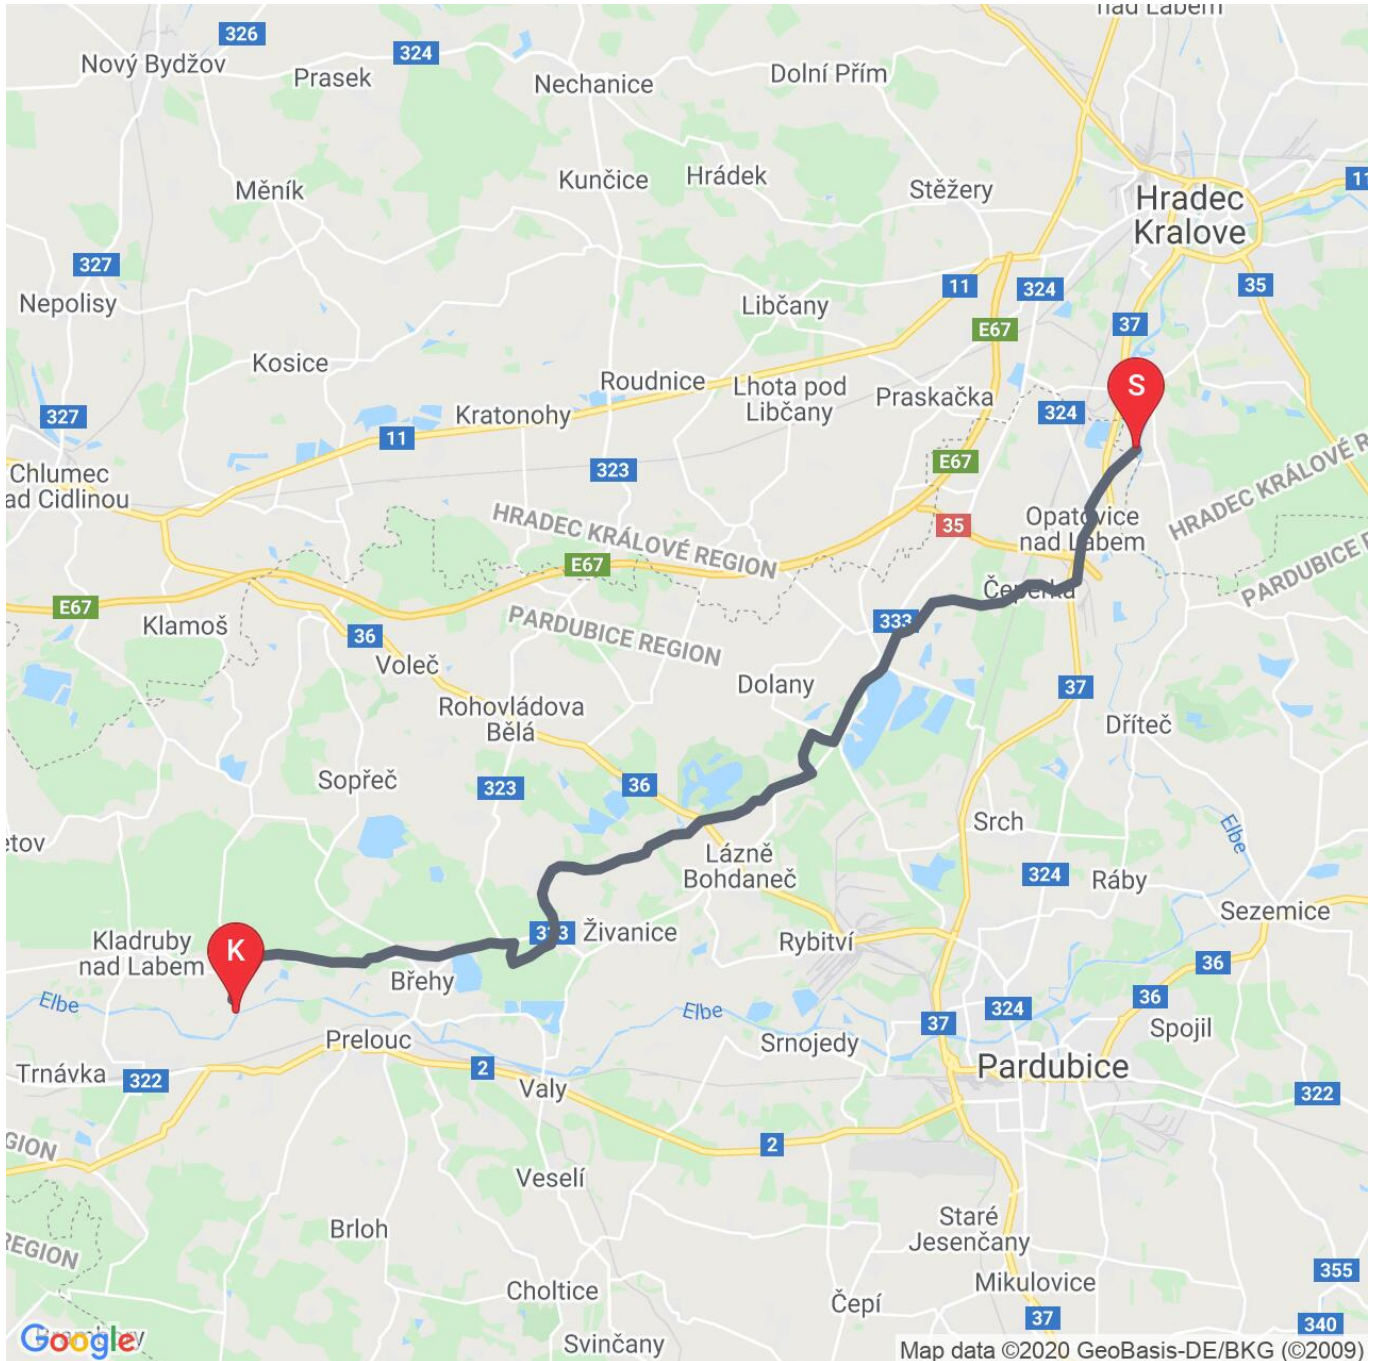

Take a calm ride along the water canal that was built in the time of William of Pernstein.

Do you feel like embarking on an interesting trip? Try the Opatovice Canal in Pardubicko. It serves as a water source for fish ponds, and can be navigated by diverging from the Elbe River at the weir by Opatovice nad Labem until it opens into the Elbe past Přelouč u Semína. This entire section, which flows through forests and lowlands, is perfect for beginners, and is navigable year-round. Your ride may be somewhat slow, but the canal has integrated so well into the landscape that you will find yourself in a lovely forested wilderness. Most of the bridges are very low. If you are coming directly from the Elbe, you will come to a divergence after one kilometre, where the river separates into two branches. Take the right-hand branch; the one on the left flows back into the Elbe. One interesting feature on this route is the aqueduct you will encounter just before Semín, where you will see a bi-level crossing of two rivers.
